

Marty Garrett, MA, CPCC, M.Ed

Making relationships work for you in all aspects of your personal and professional life.

Marty has been as an educator for the last thirty-five years. She has worked as an elementary school teacher, a Lecturer at the University of Vermont, teaching curriculum courses and supervising student teachers, and for the last twenty years, as a guidance counselor in Vermont schools. In addition, she has taught courses at Community College of Vermont, Trinity College, and Champlain College, in Interpersonal and Small Group Commendations. Marty is passionate about creating excellent schools, where learning communities are developed to encourage students, teachers, and administrators to flourish and succeed.

As a coach, Marty helps busy professional women, who have had many accomplishments, but have somehow lost themselves along the way. Marty has coached over one hundred women, guiding them to create lives that bring them great personal and professional fulfillment. Marty is a relationship systems coach, and focuses on relationships issues, knowing that one's relationship with self is critical to creating positive and satisfying relationships with others and the world. Marty's clients include women from a wide range of backgrounds, including educators, managers, artists, small business owners, social workers, and lawyers.

Marty is passionate about bringing her coaching talents to educators. She understands the perspectives of administrators, teachers, parents, and school boards, and how these interlocking roles create a multifaceted system.
